The following version of this book has been used to create this study guide: Emecheta, Buchi. Second class citizen. New York: George Braziller Inc., 1975. The novel opens in Lagos, Nigeria in the 1950s. Adah Ofilu is eight years old and she wants to get an education, but most families only send their children to school. She's so determined to get close to school one day, making sure her mother gets in trouble with the police. She is a candidate for her father as a result, but her parents allow her to continue going to school. Although this is happening, a lawyer returns to Lagos from his study in the United Kingdom (U.K.). He welcomed a hero, and Adah decides that he also wanted to go to the U.K. someday. A short time later, Adah's father dug. She is sent to live with her uncle and cousins, and they treat her like a servant. She continues to attend school, but for age 11, her family is entertaining potential husbands for her. She steals money from her cousin to pay an admission exam fee for high school, and even if she is once again for her disobedience, passes the exam and earns a scholarship to attend. All the time, Adah stays focused on her dream of one day going to the U.K. and having a career-oriented, successful life. After high school, Adah has to get married just so she has a place to live. You choose a man named Francis Obi who is studying to be an accountant. He moves with his in-laws and gets a job at the American Consulate Library. Francis is uncomfortable with the idea of his wife earning more money than him, but his father points out that she is supporting them and should be happy about it. Shortly after giving birth to their first son, a girl named Titi, Adah tells Francis of her dream of going to the U.K. and agrees to go with her. However, the father of it doesn't approve because Adah is a woman and thinks that just Francis should go. Francis leaves, and shortly after giving birth to his second child, a boy named Vicky, Adah Adah the in-laws to let you follow him. When Adah arrives in the UK, she is shocked by the bad conditions of the neighborhood and the house in which Francis has chosen to live. She is also annoyed by the other inhabitants of the house, who all belong to the Yoruba ethnicity, while she and Francis are Ibo (Igbo). Francesco tells her that they cannot expect better conditions because © They are black and therefore second class citizens (39). Adah finds work in a library in North Finchley and soon finds herself pregnant again. She leaves her children with a babysitter named Trudy while she works, why © Francis says he has to study for the accounting exams during the day. He also refuses to get a job. One day, Adah goes to Trudy during the day when she is not expected and finds her entertaining a guest while Titi and Vicky are out playing in the trash without supervision. Adah is furious, but she has nowhere else to leave the children. Shortly after, Vicky gets meningitis and risks dying. Adah confronts Trudy and throws her a vacuum cleaner. Children are enrolled in a kindergarten. Adah and Francis are evicted from their apartment because © The owner and the other tenants don't like them. It is difficult to find a new home because © Many advertisements report the warning "Sorry, no coloureds" (70). Adah finds an ad that doesn't say it, and hides her accent on the phone when she talks to the owner. However, as soon as she and Francis come to take a look at the apartment and the landlady sees that they are black, she sends them away. They finally find a place to live in the home of another Nigerian immigrant, Mr. Noble. Shortly after, Adah doesn't feel well. The baby's kicking a lot, but she's not due for weeks. He's trying to go to work, but it's a railroad strike, so go home. Francesco gives her a lesson on laziness and Adah goes to the doctor, who tells her that she is in labor. She is... and then sent to the hospital for a C-section. The baby's a boy. When you wake up after surgery, you are in the maternity ward with other women who have just given birth. She is jealous of their beautiful nightgowns and their husbands who produce them with attentions and gifts. Francesco rarely comes, and when he does, he is sad. Adah thinks the other women are judging her for her race. When Adah leaves the hospital, she goes to a family planning clinic to try to get a contraceptive. You need Francis's signature, so forge it. Francis finds out and beats her mercilessly. Soon after, Adah discovers she is pregnant again. He tells Francis that he will no longer support him financially and that he must find a job. When she gives birth to her fourth child, a female, Adah decides to write a book while she is on maternity leave. Adah shows the book to her library friends, who are very supportive and recommend that she send it to publishers. Francis is less impressed and burns his manuscript. He's failed his accounting exams repeatedly and he doesn't want to have a wife more skilled than him. They fight again and Adah takes the kids and moves into her apartment. Francis finds her there and beats her again. Afterwards © Adah goes to court to try to get a protection order. Francis lies and claims that his wounds are all the result of falls, but the court orders him to pay the alimony. As she leaves the courthouse, Adah meets an old Nigerian friend.
